Abbott's Aromatic Bitters was one of the most famous cocktail bitters from the 19th Century and had a reputation as one of the finest brands of Aromatic Bitters to be used in classic cocktails such as the Manhattan, Old Fashioned and numerous others.

Abbott's Aromatic Bitters, once known as Abbott's Angostura Bitters, was originally produced in Baltimore from 1872 until the early 1950's when the company ceased production. Tempus Fugit Spirits acquired the legal trademark for Abbott's Bitters to produce a version of this famous recipe once again.

The principal ingredient in Abbott's Aromatic Bitters was angostura (tree) bark. Angostura bark bitters were common during most of the 19th century, originating as a flavoring alternative to cinchona bark (quinine) and became a highly desired and distinctive style of aromatic bitters for cocktails of all types.

Tempus Fugit Spirits' version of Abbott's Aromatic Bitters is a true "Angostura Bark Bitters" recipe and represents over seven years of detailed research to faithfully recreate one of the most popular cocktail bitters in the world. We sourced numerous historic recipes and meticulously sampled our results against dozens of sealed, vintage bottles of Abbott's Aromatic Bitters to ensure authenticity.

Abbott's Aromatic Bitters comes in a reproduction of an original bottle from the early 20th Century with a pre-Prohibition era variant of the brand's label art. Every bottle also comes in a reproduction box inspired by an original 1914 Abbott's Aromatic Bitters box from the Tempus Fugit Spirits archives.

Tempus Fugit Spirits is proud to be the custodian of this venerable brand and is pleased to offer our complex and historic Abbott's Aromatic Bitters to cocktail professionals and enthusiasts.
